

Class Notes Oct 2012 Issue

My apologies to all that were expecting notes in the last issue. Although some of this information is a little dated it's still all good. A number of us are going through yet another child either entering or leaving college to which these notes attest. What that also means is that you guys are all getting older.

Ken Frostmeier reported that second son, Thomas, has entered the Academy. It's not the THE Academy but an Academy non the less. He began hi Plebe Summer at the naval Academy on Jun 28th. There have been some Facebook postings showing off his new hairdo. Attached is a photo stolen from Facebook at Parent weekend.

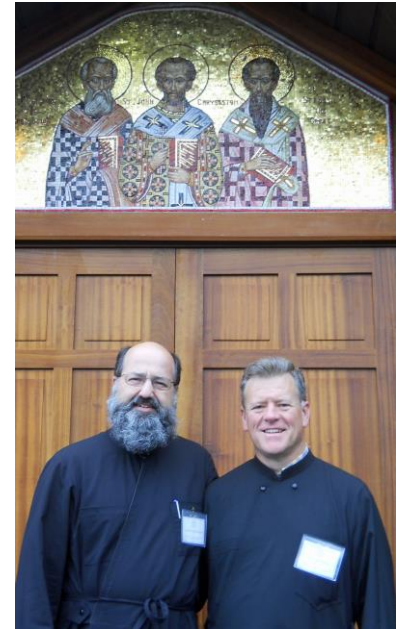

In the last published notes I mentioned that Rick Naccara's son Erik reported into THE Academy in July. It should have been June but you guys all knew that. Since I had already gone to press there was not photographic evidence but since, I received one of Erik taking a nice walk on the Parade Field.

Nick Dujmovic writes: I was in for a big surprise in early June when I went to St. Vladimir's Orthodox Theological Seminary in Crestwood, New York, for a four-day training practicum in how to serve as an Orthodox deacon. Among the thirty or so men in black cassocks was one who called my name and seemed to know me. It was Bill Brubaker! Like me, he had become Orthodox as an adult and, like me, he was training to become a deacon. It was great going through the program--church services, lectures, and practical training from early morning until late at night--with an old friend and a brother in the faith.

Rod Walker checked in that he had traveled to Beijing, China in late June, with the following: Beijing was amazing because being the picky eater that I am, I could not find or they did not serve ice, popcorn, pancakes, or pepperoni pizza. Much to my own disbelief, there were no Szechuan Beef or Hunan Chicken dishes at the local Beijing eateries...only foods that looked back at me! I ate more vegetables in 5 days than in my 54 years total on this planet!

Again this information is a little dated but still worth reporting. Victor Kelley wrote: A note from the Kelley's (Victor, Diana, Jenna, Emma) as we again spent a May family vacation in sunny New London during USCGA Graduation Week Activities. This year honoring our son Derek. Derek graduated with a BS in Marine Science. He is going to Kodiak Island stationed on CGC MUNRO as an ensign. Attached is proof that Vic can still fit into

So that means, upon Kelley Boys went engineering onboard before these ships are his wife, Ensign Amy Kelley, graduation festivities. Brenden year) to present Ensign Derek Attached is proof that Vic can some nice Whites.

Southwood checked in with the My son, Lance, recently still fit into

following:

graduated from San Diego State with an MBA in Sports. He's found a job in Boston, so will be moving even further away from Idaho. It's a great place to visit, so I will probably be traveling to New England on a somewhat regular basis now. I'm attaching a photo from his graduation. My mother is also in the picture. I'm still living in Boise (going on 26 years), working as a manager for software developers and dabbling in development when I'm not buried with my other duties.
