Crime at Clay: Is Our School Safe?

Charee Holloway
NEWS EDITOR

Imagine this, You get to your locker after class and open it, only to find a bunch of your stuff missing. This is a situation that has become all too familiar to many of Clay's students. Although, Clay has one of the lowest crime rates out of all the local high schools, the rate of thefts has been growing. A few weeks ago, in just one day four cars were broken into.

Also, this year there has been one car theft and a Moped theft. Some students blame the increase in thefts on lack of security provided by the school. Senior Ryan Timm, who had his car stolen a few weeks ago said, "I felt that the school ought to have better protection for students and their property." However, it is almost impossible for the school to keep the entire building, with over 30 exits, monitored at all times.

The school has done a lot to ensure the safety of students and continues to do more. They would like to add security cameras and possibly install new lockers. Junior Jay Kitchner, who had his car broken into said, "I didn't really blame the school, I think the students should be more careful about their stuff." Many student's have seen or been victim to crime at school. Crimes are committed at schools around the country. School Administrations have meetings with each other about crime and student safety. The South Bend Community School Corporation feels that students could do more to keep their schools safe. Student Crimestoppers works exactly like regular Crimestoppers, except it deals directly with crimes that happen on and around school property. There is even a cash reward.

Some student's feel that reporting a crime could get you in trouble with other students, but with this program you remain completely anonymous. "I guess it would depend on the seriousness of the crime, whether or not I would report it," said Senior Melissa Maxwell.

Principal John Harris stated, "Student Crimestoppers is very successful program, it has made a difference in helping to investigate crimes and make our school a safer place." You can also report a crime to a counselor or any other staff member. "Reports of crime are not as bad as some people think, but we do need support from students," commented Sergeant Eric Kaser, school resource officer. So, if you ever see a crime remember you do have options.

Students and staff arrived at school a few weeks ago to the sight of vandalism on the athletic shed near the Clay Practice Field. According to Sgt. Eric Kaser students need to take the initiative to help keep their school safe from such acts.

Devastating Earthquakes Rock Taiwan

Nai-Wen Wong
STAFF WRITER

October 10 is Taiwan's national birthday; we called it Double Tenth Holiday. But this year, the government canceled all the celebrations because of the earthquake on September 21, the saddest national anniversary day.

The strongest earthquake to strike Taiwan in 100 years killed at least 2,300 people and more than 8,300 were injured. So many people lost all they had in 20 seconds and felt how lines between life and death are so close. After the killer quake, people realized life is cannot be taken for granted, even with a lot of uncertainty and potential risk in our lives. September 24 was our homecoming, and it was also the Moon Festival. This is the reunion day for Chinese people, but this year it was deadly silent. "The situation was extremely dire and there's nothing left," one survivor said. "This was absolutely the most violent thing imaginable, many people are feeling emotionally sickened by this."

Now Taiwan struggles to recover from the devastating earthquake. It's a painful start and our people have a long way to go. Reading the tragic stories on the Internet, it's really hard to believe what happened in Formosa, especially across the ocean. "The first thing I did was call back to Taiwan and see if my parents are okay," said Junior Kevin Chen. Besides the phone and the Internet, nothing can do much help. "Fortunately my parents are fine, but we lost two TV's and my computer," Chen said. More than ten thousand aftershocks hit Taiwan; no one knows when will it slow down. No matter how many tears and trembling, we still have to face it. It was the most horrible moment in my life.

"The Day Taiwan Crumbled." It only brought the traumas of 22 million people in Taiwan to light, but also deeply hurt those people who were concerned about it. "I saw the news on TV and I was worried about the people there. It is really sad and I feel sorry for them," said Junior Abby Borne. Their sympathy for Taiwan was greatly appreciated.

The nightmare is not over and it may last for a long time. It's hard to see my people suffering through a great calamity, but now the whole country has rallied together. Helping each other and hoping will get them through it in time.

Remembering Mr. Grenert

On September 25, 1999, one of the South Bend Community School Corporation's best passed away, from natural causes. Mr. John Grenert, who retired at the end of the '97-'98 school year, taught fifth grade at Swanson Highland Elementary for thirty-four years.

Social Studies was his favorite subject; he devoted a lot of time informing his students on the everyday life of the pioneers. He created a day, which was used to demonstrate, with hands-on activities, how the pioneers lived...he called this Pioneer Day.

Many thought that he was such a great teacher because he was so open and personal with his students. For many he made learning fun. Mr.

Grenert will be missed by many of his friends, students, and teachers

Editorial

Halloween, known to many as "Devils Day," has been a very controversial holiday for celebrating. Hollywood adds to this by making movies about the evil things that are believed to be associated with the holiday. Christians and philosophers contrast the opinion that the holiday is ritualistic, while others think that it's a day of celebration of the coming fall.

Let's discuss the social involvement. For instance, why would so many children dressed as pumpkins, ghosts, and vampires be so scared of trick-or-treating? Because older children go bag snatching just for kicks, or sick and demented adults poison candy apples and tootsie rolls for a good laugh.

How can you honestly say you have fun by stealing candy from kids? It seems pretty low, considering high school kids have jobs or other monetary sources and can go down to Walgreen's or Martin's and buy all the sweets they can eat until they are given more in their nice little stockings hanging nestled from the mantle of the fireplace.

Think back to when you were a little kid and imagine how you would feel if you were the victim of a Halloween prank. It's really pathetic that you have to have your candy x-rayed before you can even crack the seal on your Blow Pop, or tear open your bag of Shock Tarts. Maybe you find these things fun to do... that's your life. A suggestion for those in this category of people who give Halloween a bad reputation: find a new way to have fun that's not at someone else's expense.

Evolution vs. Creation

Tyler Moore
STAFF WRITER

Evolution in its various forms argues for the increasing complexity of life over time. According to Charles Darwin, all living things come from one ancestor.

The Scopes Monkey Trial, often referred to as the Trial of the Century took place in Dayton, Tennessee. On trial was teacher John T. Scopes who was accused of breaking a state law prohibiting the teaching of Darwin's theory of evolution in school.

Scopes was convicted at the trial, but was released on a technicality. Tennessee repealed the law in 1967. The famous trial was also made into an acclaimed motion picture, Inherit the Wind.

There is another theory that has been here even before Charles Darwin came in with his theory of evolution. This is known as "Intelligent Design."

Advocates of Intelligent design say the concept really isn't so strange. If we may look at magnetic letters arranged on a refrigerator, we readily assess the combinations as either random or displaying some intelligible message.

Dr. Stephen Meyer, director of the Center of the Renewal of Science and Culture, is one of those advocates. "We use that mode of reasoning in all walks of life, in science and ordinary life as well," says Meyer. "That's a very exciting and intellectual development that enables us to analyze biology and to see that within the cell there are the distinctive hallmarks of design."

We still don't know everything that Darwin wrote because he was married to a devout Christian. He was very reluctant to state everything that followed from his theory.

Where do all living beings come from? But way back in the beginning, where did first frogs, flowers, men come from?

The life and death of Christ is because of existence of Adam as a man created by God, and the original sin. Without Adam's fall there is no purpose to Christianity.

Creationism offers only one answer: It began when God designed and made our first parents. Since creation was completed in the past, we would not expect to see it take place now, whereas evolution is supposed to be still going on.

We know that everything alive had to come from something else that was alive.

The state of Kansas recently decided to open the door for creationism by removing evolution as a required science curriculum, and that started a national debate. Should evolutionism and creationism be taught at schools?

One thing we should know for sure: "Ignorance is not a bliss. Those who continue to ignore scientific, well-research evidence perpetuate ignorance on the next generation," said Mrs. Mary Short, science teacher.

Mr. Les Rassi said: "If Creationism is only taught in church and evolution is only taught in schools then both sides end up having biased opinions and there is very little exchange of ideas between the two groups except in confrontational 'debates'."

My point is, hope we don't live in the moral Stone Age. Like Baba Dioum said "In the end, we will conserve only what we love, we will love only what we will understand, and we will understand only what we are taught."

Fear is very normal. However, irrational fears, or phobias, can prevent you from leading a normal life. Some examples are acrophobia (fear of heights) and arachnophobia (fear of spiders).

Some people's greatest fears are pretty amusing. Freshman Sarah Thomas said, "Clowns scare me for some reason." She humorously added, "How do they fit so many clowns into one car? That's what bothers me."

Other people's fears are more serious. Sophomore Alisia Hill said, "One of my top fears is dying alone. I hate to know that I will die with no one there to help try and save me."

Commonly held fears

- Lightning (astrophobia)
- Fire (pyrophobia)
- Depth (bathophobia)
- Computers (logizomechanophobia)
- Thunder (brontophobia)
- Speaking in public
- Crossing streets (dromophobia)
- Sickness

- Enclosed spaces (claustrophobia)
  - Snakes (ophidiophobia)
  - Being buried alive (tapephobia)
  - Cats (Ailurophobia)
  - Fear of writing (Graphophobia)
- Are any of your fears similar to those listed above?

Do You Like Scary Movies?

Rob Lind
STAFF WRITER

When you think of your favorite scary movie, what comes to mind? Perhaps Psycho, Halloween, or The Birds. As the Halloween season rolls around horror films become more popular. With people wanting to be scared, it is nice to have a hearts of Americans, Freddie is not dead. Rumors still float around about Jason vs. Freddie movies being produced. Anyone of the seven sequels would be a good movie to watch, if you want to be frightened.

Another popular selection is The Exorcist. It is a shocking horror story about devil possession and the exorcism of the demonic spirits from a young, innocent girl. It still terrifies anybody that watches it. The thought of a demon possessing your soul is quite enough to frighten anyone.

Scream is a current choice that can almost be considered a classic. In this movie you are always asking yourself who the killer is. There are always guesses, but the truth is never known until the last scene. Scream is definitely a good movie, if you like sitting on the edge of your seat, biting your nails, and wondering, who the killers really are. Steven King's It has frightened Seniors A.J. Jones, and Matt Vogt. Jones commented, "Oh dude, the clown was crazy." Vogt said, "For a month I was scared to use the bathroom, the clowns were going to come through the pipes and eat me." In this movie, a clown-like creature, named Pennywise takes the lives of people in anyway possible. The 'It' has no name; it is like a light that can transform into anything. Even Stephen King doesn't know what the 'It' is. This movie is definitely a ten.

For Freshman Michelle Maldonado and Sophomore Kyle Wojtys, The Blair Witch Project freaks them out. Wojtys explained "It seemed real, kind of like a documentary." Maldonado said, "Everything just happened unexpectedly." They recommend this movie for anyone that wants a scare.

No matter what your favorite scary movie is, just remember one thing: Never say "I'll be right back"... because you won't.

It's about that time again, Halloween! That means candy, scary movies, and most of all costumes. From Barney for the toddlers to the vampires for the adults, costumes are the biggest part of Halloween.

Do you remember when you were younger and your mom would paint your face and put little ballerina or G.I. Joe outfits on? Well, we have grown older, but we still like to dress up. Some of us will go trick or treating and others will just hand out candy. Either way, costumes are fun to wear.

As many of us know, Halloween costumes range anywhere from about $15 to, a couple of thousand dollars. This includes the outfit and props. You can also make your own for much less. If anyone wants to make their own costume, they can find books and other information on the internet. If you have enough imagination, you can also design your own ensemble. We have found that, out of a hundred students at Clay, most would rather dress up as ninjas. The least thing people want to dress up as, is a monster. Most women would rather be princesses than cats. Coming in at second place is a devil and followed by a vampire. So you see that the classics are always in style.

Even though most of us won't go trick or treating, we can still dress up and pass out candy, or go to a party. If you are going out, remember that there are a lot of crazy people around here so be safe. We at The Colonial hope you have a happy Halloween!

little help when choosing the right movie.

When selecting a scary movie, a good choice would be one of the seven sequels of Friday the 13th. The film features Freddy Krueger as a re-incarnated child molester with razor-fingered gloves that haunts children in their dreams. In the

One Haunted Night In Niles

Jeni Carmichael
STAFF WRITER

It's time for Halloween, and you know what that means...the Niles Haunted House! For some, the Haunted House has become a tradition. Whether it is for the scare or to make fun of it, the Niles Haunted House is the place to go.

I thought I'd do some research, so a few friends and I piled into five cars and our mini caravan headed out towards our destination.

Now, keep in mind that this is my personal experience, and I'll do my best to give a neutral description.

When we got there, around 7:30 p.m., it was already packed. We ended up parking all the way out in Timbuktu, or so it seemed. I guess parking in the back could be a good thing since we did get out early, but at the time it was just a nuisance.

After the ten-minute walk, we were greeted by a huge line and groups of people smoking before they entered. A whiney man with a nasal voice kept walking up and down the line announcing everything that would set the metal detector off. As much as he was talking, you'd think lint would set it off!

We were all ecstatic when the half-hour wait in line was over, now all we needed were tickets. I don't want to sound cheap, but this year the tickets were raised an extra dollar, making a grand total of $6 for one single ticket. They do, however, have "special deals" if you buy more than one ticket at a time. In my eyes, two tickets for $10 isn't much of a deal.

Okay, now to get inside the House. You basically walk around in dark hallways for about fifteen minutes. You finally get to Beetlejuice who leads you into an elevator, which leads to the many rooms of the main house: the cockroach room, the moving Jason mask room, and many more.

Not to be negative, but I, along with many other people I've talked to, found the whole House rather boring. The whole atmosphere is ruined; you don't find yourself clutching the person in front of you, closing your eyes or screaming out anymore. Maybe it's a waste of time and money, but it is a great opportunity to take matters into your own hands and scare your friends.

Hack This Up

Nathan Ferrone
STAFF WRITER

Whether you are new to this school or not, more than likely you have seen some kids standing around in a Hack circle. Since about this time two years ago, the hacky sack community began to take its firm hold on Clay. Now there is a Hack circle forming in nearly every major gathering place in school, from the band hall in the wee hours of the morning, to the bus pick up lane at end of the day.

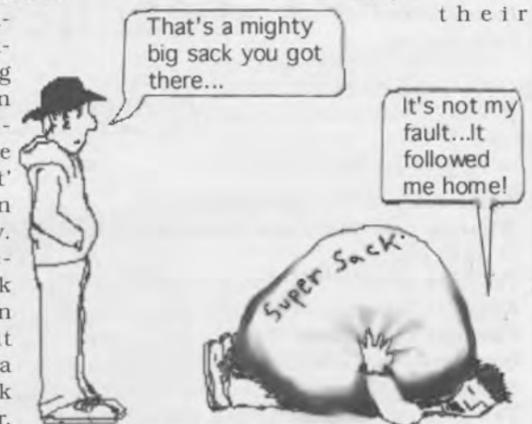

Hacky sack is soon becoming the fastest growing 'sport' in Clay's history. Now the word 'sport' may be taken quite literally.

Just recently work has been done to put together a hacky sack club together.

If you talk to Mr. Don Gerstbauer about his involvement with the cause, you would find out just how interested he was in putting it together. According to him, he wants to give students the encouragement to run whatever organization they can put together. He thought the idea for the club constitution was well planned, but he just needs to work out the details to make a final copy.

One of the students behind the idea, and the current president, Sophomore Megan McGrew, said the reasons behind her commitment was "So many people enjoy playing hacky sack, everywhere you look you see a group of people hacking!"

The entire Idea of the club was conceived during a game of hack, and this is what she said about it, "I was playing with Dean Heintzelman one day and we thought, why don't we start a hacky sack team?" So from then on they started their work getting petitions, signatures, and members. She also talked about how much she would look forward to seeing hacky sack clubs expand into other schools, and to see them all compete against each other.

So next time you notice a Hack circle forming at Clay, feel free to join in, but just remember one thing...keep your hands off the sack!

Sports Commentary

Women Invade A Traditionally Male Domain

Paris Clark
SPORTS EDITOR

Imagine going to a wrestling match to see a girl line up against a guy, who is trained to neutralize his opponent at the first opportunity. Or how about going to a football game, one of the most violent sports played by man, and seeing a young woman crushed by three heavy linebackers? Playing football is a battle that puts the most people on attack as the opposition to try and out number them. Some believe it's no place for a woman, who's thought of as delicate being in a rough world. Some girls, however, feel it's o.k. for them to play traditional guys' sports.

What makes these girls want to play in a sport that really measures the brutness and ferocity one posses? This writer thinks it's silly and should not be allowed. I see these politically incorrect girls as just trying to get some attention and stand out from the rest.

Senior Matt Qualley stated about girls playing men sports, "I'm all for it; just don't come crying to me when you get hurt." Sophomore Jay Schoenherr commented, "they should stick to Cheerleading." It's a bit rude to say but that's the kind of emotions that stir up when a guy thinks of a woman playing a sport that men have dominated.

Freshman Allison Zientara disagreed, saying, "I think girls should be allowed to play whatever they want to play." Why should girls be allowed to play women's sports when guys can't play women sports? Men play volleyball but you don't see guys making a big issue of not being allowed to play on the school's team. Secondly, in today's modern times every one is always trying to break out of the social barriers; however, when they can use the old ways of doing something to their advantage, it never fails they do.

I think it's wrong to allow girls to play men's sports when men aren't allowed to play women's. The only reason some of them want to play for attention, which should not be allowed. Everyone knows the average woman cannot compete with the average male when it comes to sports. So what I'm saying to all the people it applies to, stick to your own sports.

Boys' Tennis Spread Lots of 'Love'

Shaun Palus
BUSINESS MANAGER

As the fall season comes to an end, the tennis team finished the season with some strong wins and personal bests. The team was led by co-captains Senior Dave Stanton and Sophomore Vijay Ramanan.

The team had many close wins and losses, but their biggest win was a 3-2 victory against Riley on September 23. In that game, many of Clay's tennis players stepped up and many had their biggest win of the season. Sophomore Sunjay Acharya describes this past season by stating that, "Our team didn't perform as well as we should have, but a lot of people improved a great deal.

Junior Marco Sandusky, who mostly played doubles along with Sunjay, reflects on the team's performance and looks ahead to the future by saying, "We all played really hard this year. Every match we played was close. Next year I'm sure that more of those close matches will go our way."

Ramanan also congratulated his team. "I was impressed with how hard we played this year. Everyone had the right attitude, and although our record didn't show it, we were a very solid team," he said. The boy's tennis team ended a 4-4 record in the N.I.C. and a 6-8 record overall.

This year, the team faced Riley again in the Sectionals, which they lost a tough match by a close 3-2. Although the team lost, Ramanan advanced to the Regionals, where he faced Penn's Troy Havens. In that match, Vijay lost a tough match on October 9.

Ramanan also received first-team All-N.I.C., with a record of 12-3; also Sophomore Kashij Shaikah received Honorable Mention on the N.I.C. team.

With a young team of individuals like Juniors Marco Sandusky, Jim Vandy, Chris Smigielski, David Wolfson, Aaron Thomas, and Kevin Lawton, and Sophomores Vijay Ramanan, Kashij Shaikah, Sunjay Acharya and Chris Geist, many of this year's close matches will turn next year's into victories. Next season the tennis team will become a force to be reckoned with.

Girls Can Kick It Too!

Megan Walker & Abby Herreman

So, how does it feel to be the first Clay girls' soccer team to be the co-champs of the NIC? Senior co-captain Erin Poe comments "It feels great that we won but the title should be only Clay's.

We beat Adams and nothing else should be said." In the beginning the team set goals and worked hard to achieve them. Junior Kristen Kearns said, "I am very proud of the varsity team. I knew they could do because they have so much respect for each other."

Over the course of the season the team did fun activities to improve team unity. The girls had pasta parties before big games and big sisters and little sisters for encouragement and support. They also went to the beach and had pool parties. Senior co-captain Kristin Rodick stated "In order to play well on the field, you have to have a friendship with the players on and off the field."

Both Head Coach Ron Zielinski and Assistant Coach Paul Kingston have been at Clay for three years and managed to improve the team's record every year. "Kids are kids anywhere you go, but I find Clay players have an intense pride in themselves and their school. Clay girls' soccer is totally the bomb!" Coach Z. said about the team. Coach Paul commented, "The players have a great spirit and a good outlook on the game."

The team had a lot of memorable moments this season. Sophomore Lauren Stanisic and Coach Paul agreed that one of them was when they traveled to Lake Central and beat them. It was special because the previous two years Lake Central handed them two crushing defeats. Senior co-captain Kara Konstany's remembers when Coach Z. ran up and down the field yelling "Shagadelic baby!"

There has always been the question "Which team is better? Boys or girls?" The boys' soccer team was asked what they thought of the girls. Senior Rob Irvine commented, "Some of them could whoop, me but others I wouldn't mind dating." On the contrary Junior Kevin Chen says, "They are weak and no good." But Junior John Lehman sums it up by saying "FIRE!"
