“ . . . Yes, I do miss him. There was a lot there to miss. That bright-eyed smile, that dimpled satisfaction he got just out of being around people. Oh, sure he was young and, like us all, he had to struggle with his youth. But I think he was better because he transcended. To him life was simple and enjoyable, and he wasn't about to be dragged down into some corporate battle with the world for relevance or recognition. He didn't need to fight for or prove his individuality. He got so much out of life because he gave it so much. He gave it his whole self . . .

Jim Tamasi

Born June 22, 1953 Reborn September 25, 1970

... now I envy the Angels. I really do. He was mine for his best years; now he's theirs for always. And I swear I'll remember him—and what he stood for. That he wasn't just some weird facade, but a human being who was grateful for every moment. Oh, how strange it is to be happy and content these days. But my brother was just that. In all his simplicity, he was at peace with the world—and with himself. Maybe he can't say the same, but I'm counting on him praying for us now so we do find that peace. That oughta make him real happy. Thank you Lord. Thank you for my brother."
